

You know exactly what you should do.

And you cannot make yourself do it.

It was never a discipline problem.

You can do hard things. You have done them for years.

So when you can do it in one part of your life and not in another, your character did not change.

Something else did.

I never let one finish.
Today one is out.

I could close deals knocking on strangers' doors. With my own work I kept getting into the game and then retreating to the drawing board.
